4:00 p.m. - Wilson Hall, One West

The initial aim of my talk is to recollect, from a very personal point of view, the beginnings of the formal participation of Latin-American research groups or individuals in experiments at Fermilab, going back to the 1980s.

I then go to a tentative analysis of the peculiarities of the funding systems and research organizational structures in the different Latin-American countries that have participated or are currently participating in the Fermilab experimental program and try to outline what I see as the prospects for their future contributions to Fermilab's program.
