Medical Comments: While maneuvering a hoist, it fell off balance hitting the employee and causing a contusion on his lower back. The employee was transported to the ER where he was treated and released.

ES&H Comments: The employee and a co-worker were attempting to set up a portable, floor-mounted hoist (commonly called an "engine hoist") in order to install a magnet in the HINS beamline at Meson Detector Building. The employees had never used the device prior to this incident. The employee was kneeling down on the floor attempting to position one of the hoist's support legs when the hoist apparatus overturned and the lifting arm struck the employee on his back. The employee was able to stand up and after a few minutes he and the co-worker returned to their office area. After returning to the office, the employee was still in considerable pain and decided to have his co-worker call 3131 for medical assistance. The employee was transported to a hospital emergency room where he was evaluated and diagnosed with a deep tissue bruise. Treatment included prescription medication. The employee reported to the Medical Office the following day and was returned to work with no restrictions.

Claim Pending cases will now appear on the Scheduling Meeting Handout with the understanding that they are still under investigation and the details of the case may change.
