Medical Comments: Employee was getting into the back seat of van when a coworker pulled open the door into his head. Causing an abrasion. The employee reported to the Fermilab Fire Dept. where he was assessed and refused transport to hospital. Return to medical if needed.

ESH Comments: The employee and co-workers were entering a van in order to travel to another building on site. The employee was entering the rear passenger compartment at the same time that a co-worker was opening the front passenger side door. The employee's head was positioned such that when the front door was opened, the upper rear corner of the door struck the employee in the forehead, resulting in an abrasion. Since the incident occurred after regular work hours, the employee was taken to the Fire Station where he reported the incident. No treatment was needed and he returned to his work station. He had developed a headache, likely related to the event, and in consultation with his supervisor it was decided he would go home rather than complete the shift. He returned to work the following day at full duty.
